

Graphics Student Scoops the College Prize !

Many congratulations to A Level student Jamie Harrington who designed this year's College Christmas card. Ex Coopers Company and Coburn school student Jamie, (17) who is studying Graphics, Photography and Media Production, beat off stiff competition from other Art & Design students in the College's annual challenge to design the festive card. The students are given a live brief to work to and the entries are judged by a panel of staff and students.

Art & Design teacher Joe Roukin, who helps to co-ordinate the competition said: "This is an excellent challenge for the students. It helps them to understand the constraints of a professional brief and the demands of a competitive work situation. As well as giving them a real opportunity to showcase their talents it also has also given students the chance to learn how to prepare artwork for professional printing."

The card will be sent by the Principal and other college staff to colleagues all over the country.

Jamie, who will be awarded a £50 gift token by the College, was delighted with his success in the competition. His design features the College logo intricately worked into a delicate snowflake and was inspired by the artist Si Scott. Jamie plans to send the card to members of his family this Christmas! His reaction when he first viewed the professionally printed cards was 'That's quite cool!' Jamie was very pleased that he was able to work to professional standards and welcomes the next chance to enter a similar competition.
